

Visual Text Analysis Made Easy For Kids

Topic 3: Telling stories through visuals

Writing stories using text

Descriptive stories can be written using this structure:

In the introduction section, you may start by asking a question, presenting a sense of danger, or providing a hook through a sense of mystery.

Here's how you can describe your story in the body section

To end, you can use either of these methods: closed ending, open ending, or ending with a twist

Writing stories using pictures

A picture is worth a thousand words. Based on this picture, you can write good stories about the boy, his father and even the family. These characters are positioned in these sections: foreground, midground and background.

Conflict or problem

By including a conflict or problem, you can add some excitement to your story. Look closely at this picture (below) and ask these questions:

- What are the possible problems facing the boy, father, and family?
- What should they do if these problems do occur?

Disclaimer: This resource package is produced for education purposes only.