Cheat Sheet

Definition

An island is an area of land that is smaller than a continent and surrounded by water¹.

Types of Island

The islands in Singapore were formed via three types of processes: natural, reclamation and amalgamation.

Natural

The island was formed naturally, such as via shifting plate tectonics² or volcanic eruptions².

E.g. Pulau Ubin, St. John's Island

Reclamation

The island was created artificially by filling the sea with materials such as sand and soil.

E.g. Pulau Punggol Barat, Pulau Punggol Timor

Amalgamation

Smaller islands were combined together via reclamation to form a single, larger island.

E.g. Jurong Island, Pulau Tekong

Did you Know...

Singapore has one of the best petrochemical hubs³ in the world!

It is situated on Jurong Island, which was created by the amalgamation of 12 smaller islands.

Sir Stamford Raffles did not land on mainland Singapore first, but on St. John's Island!

The island, known as Pulau Sekijiang Bendera in the past, was used in the 19th and 20th centuries as a quarantine centre for infectious diseases such as leprosy. It then served as a prison for political prisoners and gang leaders before it became a camping island.

Singapore's only waste landfill is created out of the sea!

The Pulau Semakau landfill was built from the sea space between Pulau Senang and Pulau Semakau³. Despite its function, the island supports a wide variety of flora and fauna.

A failed penal experiment in Singapore led to the deaths of 4 police officers!

On 12 July 1963, some convicts incarcerated at Pulau Senang rioted, destroying the facility and killing 4 prison officers. Eventually, 18 convicts⁴ were found guilty of murder and hanged. The experiment was cancelled after this incident.

Singapore was once attacked by terrorists!

On 31 January 1974, four terrorists attempted to bomb the Shell Oil Refinery on Pulau Bukom. They failed and took 3 local hostages instead. They only released the hostages when Singapore and Japanese Government Officials acted as guarantors and flew with them to Kuwait.

Elephants had once swum from Johor to Singapore!

In May 1990, 3 wild elephants, believed to have swum over from Johor, were spotted on Pulau Tekong⁵. They were eventually captured and sent back to Malaysia by the Singapore Zoo and the Malaysian Wildlife Department as the island is used for military training.
