Module: Referencing and Citation Techniques: Summary

- 1. In general, you should cite when:
  - You take material from a specific source
  - Your readers might want to verify the information

2. You should cite when:

- You give statistics, survey and research data in your report
- You give information that is unique and not commonly known to others
- You think a reader may ask 'How do you know that?'
- You use someone else's ideas
- You use a direct quote from someone
- You paraphrase a direct quote from someone else

3. In-text citation:

- Is included in the main report
- Incorporates a brief reference put in brackets
- Is used for direct quotes and paraphrased information

4. A reference list:

- Is found at the end of the report
- Is a compilation of all the sources consulted and incorporated in the report
- Serves as an aid for readers to access the source and to verify facts used in your report

5. Two commonly used referencing styles:

- Modern Language Association (MLA): The MLA style is used by researchers for subjects in the Humanities
- American Psychological Association (APA): The APA style is used by researchers for subjects in the Social Sciences

6. How do you include an in-text citation:

- Place the author's name in brackets at the end of the paraphrased information/idea
- If it is a direct quote, do the same but put the text in quotation marks

Source . Understand . Research . Evaluate.

7. Citing for different sources in MLA style:

Newspaper	Ibrahim, Faridah. "Reading Skills for Teenagers." R is for Reading. 15 Nov. 2000: H4.
Journal	Lau, Douglas. "Innovative ideas to generate income."
	Innovation Today. Jun. 2001: 33-45.
Website	Munoo, Rajendra. "Information literacy in the classroom." Search Strategies for Students. Oct. 2005.
	Association for Student Help. 08 Feb. 2006
	http://ww.ilp.com/students .
CD-ROM	Pwee, Timothy. "Habitat of lizards in the wild."
	Encyclopaedia of reptiles. CD-ROM. 2nd ed. 2005.
Book	Yeo, Jeffrey. Internet for Research: Good, Bad and Ugly . 3rd ed. Singapore: Vision Books, 2005.

- 8. MLA citation for webpages should be in the format of:
  - Last Name, First Name. "Webpage/Article Title." Website Title. Published Date. Organization Title. Retrieved Date. <web URL>