APA and MLA Citation styles

The two commonly used styles for writing in-text citations and bibliographies are:

- American Psychological Association (APA)
- Modern Language Association (MLA)

The MLA style is usually used by researchers for subjects in the humanities. The APA style is used by researchers for subjects in the social sciences. You should refer to your project proposal to determine which style you are required to use. If the citation style to be used is not mentioned in the project proposal, then check with your teacher on which style to use.
