What Teachers Expect in an Effective Presentation

- Does the opening interest the audience?
- Are the main points structured in a clear and logical manner?
- Are the main points of the project clearly presented?
- Does the presenter speak fluently and clearly?
- Does the presenter engage the audience?
- Is the use of presentation tools effective in enhancing the main points?
- Are the key findings of your research highlighted again in the conclusion?
- How well did the group handle the audience's questions?

Additional Tips:

- Don't read the points on the slides aloud as your audience can probably read it for themselves, and in a shorter time. Provide more information regarding the points that you present.
- Memorize your script if possible to make your presentation sound more sincere and polished. Use the notes you have written only as a guide when you lose your train of thought.
- How you look is important – dress appropriately and maintain a well-groomed appearance to convey a professional image.
